HELDINNEN sind anders als Helden

Ein Platz auf dem Sockel oder in der Walhalla ist selten ihr Ziel. Heldinnentum zeigt sich im Einsatz für andere - in tatkräftiger Hilfe, im Widerstand gegen Unrecht, im Kampf für Bildung und Zukunft. Oft riskieren sie dabei ihr Leben.

formulierte Themen.

Rarely do they aim for a place on a pedestal or in Valhalla. Heroines show themselves in their commitment to others in active help, in resisting injustice, in fighting for education and the future. Often risking their lives in the process.

Hundreds of heroines who fought for peace, justice and social change, these are just a few examples:

Johanna Kinkel, author, composer, conductor and "Direktix" of the Maikäferbund Bonn, took part in the March Revolution of 1848 and subsequently had to flee to London with her family. Bertha von Suttner became an important voice of the peace movement with her novel "Lay Down Your Arms!". In 1905, she was the first woman to receive the Nobel Peace Prize for her commitment.

Jane Addams. feminist and founder of several social projects, organized the 1st International Women's Peace Congress in The Hague in 1915. In 1931 she was awarded the Nobel Peace Prize together with Nicholas Murray Butler.

Rosa Luxemburg, politician, representative of the European labor movement, Marxism, antimilitarism and proletarian internationalism, was imprisoned several times for her commitment and murdered in 1919.

Sophie Scholl was a member of the "White Rose" resistance group, which opposed the Nazi regime. In 1943, she and her comrades-in-arms were convicted and executed after a show trial. Marie Kahle courageously stood up for Jewish people during the Third Reich and had to flee to England with her five sons in 1939 because of her commitment.

Monika Hauser, a gynaecologist, founded the women's rights organization medica mondiale in the 1990s to provide medical and psychological help to women traumatized by war. She was awarded the Alternative Nobel Prize in 2008. Malala Yousafzai was shot by the Taliban as a schoolgirl because she stood up for girls' right to education. In 2014, she became the youngest person to receive the Nobel Peace Prize.
